

A device for processing an electrically conductive component includes positioning means that position the component to be processed in a processing position. The positioning means are provided with means for generating a magnetic field. The magnetic field generates forces that act contactless on the component and in this way bring about or support the positioning of the component.